Community Gardens at CPC: 2020

This summer, the Community Garden at CPC is being run a little differently. With the pandemic, Covid-19, hitting in the late winter, Channel One needed to put its resources towards the immediate hunger needs in Rochester. So, this year, they were unable to be a partner with CPC in the Community Garden. That left a big hole! Amanda Nigon-Crowley with the Diversity Council contacted CPC about letting The Village Community Garden and Learning Center run the Community Garden program this year. This year, all 15 plots are being gardened with a waiting list of 45. There seems to be more interest and activity this year. Carole Kinion Copeland continues to have contact with Amanda. The Village has also added a shed for tools, a picnic table and new compost bins.

A WORD FROM THE PASTOR'S DESK

August is nigh and the corn is high and gardening images wind through our Sunday texts like happy squash vines, blossoming everywhere. Jesus' parables, based on an agrarian society, still speak to us today. On July 12, we heard about the sower, recast in the present as a rogue farmer scattering seed all over Main Street with his 60' John Deere planter. On July 19th, the parable of the weeds and the wheat yielded more somber reflections on the nature of weeds, and how undesirable elements like racism and inequity not only pervade our culture, but infiltrate our own souls.

As I write, I'm thinking about the July 26 sermon on "the marvelous mystical mustard seed," signaling a return to abundance, and joy.

An exuberant reminder of God's faithfulness must surely live in our own gardens, at home and at church. The perennials in the Garden of Life and near the church have increased and multiplied and filled the earth; annuals spark color here and there. A small but valiant crop of carrots surrounds the whimsical sculpture at the entrance.

Great lessons, though, have come from the community gardens. Eagle Scout Tyler introduced participants to four charming chickens one Thursday: an ameraucana, a white Leghorn, an ISA Brown, and a Silkie (the Silkie doesn't lay much, and her eggs are small, but she makes a wonderful pet!). He demonstrated how comfortably and cheaply the birds can live in the movable home he built for them, now displayed next to the garden plots. He also designed and installed a compost bin for gardeners' use.

Every evening an informal society of international horticulturists arrives to hoe and harvest, water and watch for ripeness. I've learned from them about the valuable properties of plants we generally think of as weeds. East African spider plant, which grows wild, is used like spinach and rivals that American garden staple for nutrition, but tolerates heat much better. I first met amaranth as "pigweed," and fought a losing battle with it in past times. In the future I'll just harvest and eat it!

The best crop of all, though, is the friendship springing up between community gardeners and congregation members. As Carole Kinion Copeland, herself a Master Gardener, expressed it during our time of gratitude on Sunday: "CPC should be proud to share our land with the community. Let's continue to cultivate this relationship and grow together." Well said, Carole!

A BLESSING OF A NEW BEGINNING AT CPC

Thank You!

July 19th was a day of special celebration as we celebrated the “Blessing of the Pastor/Congregation Relationship.” Thanks especially to the Worship and Music Committee and the Marshall family who worked many extra hours so we could worship in the sanctuary, and to all who showed up as part of the worship team: Glenna Muir, Meg Cain, Ivy Pillers, Alayna and Stacy Kopecky, and Ronda, Peter, and Bill Marshall.

Special music was provided in person by Friedell 8th-grader Shea Morrey; her mother Ruth was also present. Shea is sharing her talents to raise money for rebuilding the East Lake Library in Minneapolis. As an avid reader, she was distressed to think that her aunt and cousins, who live near the library that was destroyed in the protests, wouldn’t have ready access to books. Her honorarium from CPC will go toward her library fundraiser.

Very special thanks go to Jean Emmons, Vice moderator of the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area, who joined us by Google Meet to lead the liturgy and make the blessing official. We can all be thankful to share ministry with our progressive and compassionate Presbytery leaders.

CPC’S COMMUNITY GARDEN: EDUCATION OPPORTUNITY

New This Year: Education Opportunity with the Community Gardens
Thursday, July 16, a Boy Scout, Tyler, gave a talk about chickens and led a construction project for a compost pile.

What’s especially beautiful about this garden is being able to get to know people we ordinarily might not meet, and in such casual friendly circumstances. It’s easy to chat in a garden. As Carole Kinion Copeland commented, these are relationships we want to “cultivate and grow!”

We give Tyler our thanks and appreciation for his really helpful and informative presentation. He is passionate about his subject (chickens) and that can’t fail to inspire others.

RESOURCES WORTH CHECKING OUT

Ten films that explore the sin of structural racism

The Rev. Dr. Edward McNulty, a Presbyterian pastor and film critic, has selected 10 films dating back to the early 1990s that expose and explore the effects of structural racism.

McNulty, pastor of Blue Ball Presbyterian Church south of Dayton, Ohio, is the author of three film books published by Westminster John Knox Press and the editor/reviewer of Visual Parables, which calls itself “a leading resource for faith-and-film reviews and study guides.”

“It was hard deciding what to leave out. There are so many available,” McNulty said of his list of recommended films.
